1. Your name is Lily. You're left to talk to someone you don't know at a party. You develop a conversation on the room in which the party is held. Your participant's name is Mr. Johns. Write the conversation using contractions and negatives wherever possible. (Each speaker talks eight times)

Answer Key

The answer to this question should include eight turns where Lily may ask Mr Johns questions like:

Do you find the room here convenient for such a party?

Do you like the place here?

Isn't it a bit too worm?

Do you find the room too small for the party?

I like the furniture. Don't you?

Do you like the colors of the walls?

Would you like to try the balcony?

Is it usual to hold parties in such small room here? In my country it's not.

Mr. Johns should answer the questions or at least many of them in the negative form using as many contractions as possible.

Other ideas for conversational questions and answers are also applicable.
